oard Rejects Fee

"The only time you start saving big bucks is when you start laying people off."-Leslie Thonesen

Trustees of the State Center Community College District refused to approve the proposed instructional materials fee by a 4-3 vote at Wednesday's board of trustees meeting.

The fee proposed called for students to pay a maximum of $30 per semester to help defray the cost of instructional materials.

Students opposed to the fee hooped, hollered, hopped and hugged outside the board room following the decision.

Fresno City College's associated student body president Grant Marcus called the decision "a great victory."

"I think it's a great victory for the over 4,000 students at Fresno City College who are financially needy. I think it's a victory for education. I think it's a victory for education. I think it's a victory for education. I think it's a victory for everyone. It emphasized that the board has a sensitivity for students."

Student trustee Tamra Kleinhammer, who asked the board to give $5 of the $30 to the ASB, was all smiles. "Good, good," was her reaction to the board decision.

Chancellor of the district, Dr. Ray Cattani, in a televised interview, said the district administration had made the proposal in an attempt to reduce the "erosion of access" to students that has been gradually worsening since the

The public interest is clear. Access is valuable to students and society only if it is access to high quality education. Access to anything else diminishes both the institution and the student. We've done a good job in our district protecting quality. We have not really protected access."

Trustee Leslie Thonesen, who voted against the fee, said he thought the district could do "more cutting and chopping. He said, "The only time you start saving big bucks is when you start laying people off."

Salaries make up 65 percent of the district's annual budget. Robert Arroyo, representing the La Raza faculty, also suggested staff cuts as an alternative to fees.

He said the La Raza faculty has recommended the curtailment or elimination of summer school, schedule C (part-time) employees and administrative support services. He said the La Raza faculty also recommended the district support the split-role tax initiative.

Dan Webb, ASB president at KRCC, said "access was not a tangible argument." He said studies show an enrollment loss of only 2½ percent would result from a $50 a year fee at the community college level.

El Salvador: The People Will Win

by Dale J. Cahill Rampage Reporter

The clouds roll gently across the lush green tropical mountains. The ocean slaps against the shoreline, eroding the beach as it has done for hundreds of years.

This scene could be many places throughout the world, yet this particular one is in a country that itself is being eroded much like the shoreline that presses against the great Pacific Ocean.

El Salvador — a land rich in history, rich in natural beauty; a country plagued by internal unrest, and beseiged by outside turbulance since the Spanish conquistadors of the sixteenth century.

El Salvador's history, particularly its recent history, is brought to the American public in the documentary, El Salvador: The People Will Win. Sponsored by the Latin American Support Committee, this film was shown April 30 at the Tower Theater.

Filmed on location, the film questions (JS intervention in a country that has seen or at least sensed revolution in the air since the early thirties when Farabundo Marti led a peasant uprising against the ruling government. The film traces the Salvadoran people's 500 year struggle for freedom, centering on the present upheaval in that country.

Band Concert

The Fresno City College symphonic band will host a major concert Tuesday, May 11, as part of the college's celebration of "Community College Week," May 9-15.

The 8 p.m. concert will feature performances of works by Gershwin, Charles Ives, Josef Haydn and Shostakovich. The concert will be highlighted by a performance of Gershwin's "Rhapsody In Blue" by noted Fresno pianist Sally Christian-Lorenz. Camile Saint Saen's "Symphonic No. 3 in C (organ) Finale," will be performed on the college theatre's new concert organ by Lynn Rodriguez.

and a machine gun in the other.
Shot under the extreme conditions of war, and often in secret, the documentary takes us on a journey through the early days of El Salvador's culture through the rebellion of 1932 that saw over 30,000 people killed. The FMLN film centers on Salvadoran citizens, (many of whom were killed during the filming) who speak out against the small percentage of people who own over 60 percent of the land.

Through the lens of a camera, we see the massacre, attributed to the military, on the El Salvador University Campus.

We see women weep at the mutilated remains of their husbands and children. We see corruption and money, rich and poor. But most of all in this film we see a glimmer of hope in the eyes of a people starved for freedom.

The film reveals the US involvement and presence in El Salvador as intruders who are interfering with the Salvadorans' quest for freedom. The film shows the strength these people have to overcome even the US Marines. Yet as a FMLN leader said in the film, the people will lose their quest for freedom if the US continues to interfere.

El Salvador: The People Will El Salvador: The People Will Win is a statement by the FMLN to the rest of the world. The war there is not an imported war with communist roots, but an ongoing war brought to life by El Salvador's own problems created in part by outside intervention.

The film is an enlightening documentary of a grim conflict in the world today. It shows the country, the people, and the land waiting to write their own history.

An Englishman's View of American Education

Rampage Reporter

Michael Morrow, an exchange teacher from England teaching economics and history at Fresno City College this year, is highly impressed by the American educational system. He says, "My impressions have been extremely good and positive."

At a faculty forum meeting last Tuesday, Morrow gave an Englishman's view on American education. He traded teaching positions this year with FCC instructor David Hendrickson, who is taking Morrow's place at West Buckland School in Barnstaple, England.

Morrow feels that if the average American does not receive a good education, he can blame no one but himself. Morrow praises the great number and types of courses available in American colleges, and the availability of college education to people of all ages, abilities, and backgrounds.

One thing that surprised Morrow at FCC was the number of students who finance their way through school by working at one or more jobs. While he feels this gives them a more realistic preparation for their after-college life, he fears that it makes it difficult to do well in their studies.

He compared this to British education, where students usually receive grants and don't normally work while they are attending college. Morrow said this seemed to give these British students an "elitist attitude."

Morrow said one of the failures of the American school system, and to some extent those of other countries, is declining literacy. He said, "I feel that the average student has a standard of literacy that is barely acceptable."

Morrow said La-Raza studies courses might be more helpful to non-Hispanic students, be-cause it gives them a better understanding of Hispanic auderstanding of Hispanic culture.

The American system of teachers grading their own students is another thing Morrow disagrees with. He thinks this system creates inconsistency in grading, and allows a teacher who might not attract students otherwise to do so with an "easy" grading policy. In Britain teachers prepare students for standardized national exams. Morrow praised FCC's Enabler Program. "I don't think you should underestimate the importance of that," he said.

Morrow told those attending the faculty forum they may be too close to the educational system to see how well it is actually working. He said they should be proud of its success.

by Chris Comstock

The Fresno City College Community Service Office sponsored a bus trip to the San Francisco exhibit of "in Search of Alexander." Prior to the trip, Dr. Carl Waddle, dean of Humanities, gave a talk and a slide show on the life and times of Alexander the Great.

Waddle said that although he does not teach history, he has always had an interest in it. The purpose of the program was to Waddle said so much is known about Alexander's travels because he took historians with him to record his great deeds. However, Alexander himself has been lost. Although it is known that he died in Babylon, his tomb was said to be in Egypt but it has neverbeen found.

The exhibit includes many items from the period, and some that are said to have belonged to Alexander himself.

Education Cuts

by Sam Williams

Open access to high quality education was dealt a staggering blow Wednesday night when the trustees of the State Center Community College District refused to approve the administration's proposed instructional materials fee.

Central to the administration's proposal was a reluctance to reduce staff and thereby reduce the offerings of the college.

The administration was clear about the alternative. The district needed the fee or cuts in education would be made.

Students of the district will not be paying an instructional materials fee. Instead we will be paying a fee that is much more costly. We will be receiving less quality and quantity in our education.

costly. We will be receiving less quality and quantity in our education.

What staff and programs will go to the chopping block first?
Certificated full-time instructors are safe at least for the next year. (Inder state law these instructors must be notified in writing by March 15 of any change in the number of classes they will be teaching next year. That deadline has past.
Part-time instructors (Schedule C) can be cut with just 30 days notice. So can the people who help keep Fresno City College running smoothly, the painters, the janitors, the work study people, and the secretaries.
Last semester 120 classes were cancelled at FCC because the district could not afford to pay instructors to teach them. These were not empty classes—many of them were full.
Some programs have been cut altogether.
There is no more wrestling. There is no more library science.

There is no more westing. There is no more invary science.
There is no more fire science.
At Kings River programs in chemistry and engineering have cuts.

Programs like the Rampage are sure to be eliminated. The drama department, the music department, the media center, the enablers program, night school, summer school, and the counseling center are all programs which are prime candidates for elimination.

The trend in education is toward basics, and FCC will concentrate on the basics—reading, writing, & arithmatic.

The purpose of an under-graduate education, to insure the student's exposure to a wide variety of differing programs, will be sacrificed.

student's exposure to a wide variety of differing programs, will be sacrificed.

It is here where the cuts to education will be most deeply felt.

Yes, students won a great victory. They can keep $30 a semester, less than $2 a week, in their pockets.

But the over-all educational picture at FCC is bleak. Now there will be fewer offerings of even fewer classes which will result in quality education for even fewer students.

Rampage Nod

I feel the Rampage has sub-stantially improved this year. The story selection is ap-propo, to the point, and timely. A. W. Rumley History and political science instructor Pinuelas was elected ASB president and John Simmons, new student trustee. Simmons will represent students at board of trustee meetings.

Efforts by the Rampage to contact the new officers on Friday were unsuccessful.

There is no official word as yet as to why the campaign and elections were so low profile.

Some students have been dissatisfied with the lack of active campaigning by ASB office seekers.

One student commented, "I would really like to get involved because there's a lot of things happening around here that is going to affect me as a student. How can I trust the student government if I don't know who they are or what they believe in?"

they are or what they believe in?"
When asked why he overlooked the last issue of the Rampage in which the candidates appeared he replied, "Those are faces on paper. They don't talk to me. How do I know they were for real?"
The reality is an apathetic student body. Some students feel this apathy has worked to the advantage of unopposed candidates.
"I'm not going to vote for these guys, said a second-year radiology student. "I read the Rampage and all their comments and they are asking us to get off our 'apathetic asses. They don't even care enough to come out and let the people know what they stand for.

Some students were people know what they stand for."

Some students were concerned that this year's election reflects a kind of quasi-anarchy within the student body. They felt that no student government at all would be just as effective.

A liberal arts major said she was sure Pinuelas "and the rest of the senate will do a good job. I voted because I care about what happens even though it was a shaky campaign."

What seems to be dissatisfyshaky campaign.

What seems to be dissatisfying to most students is the haste in which the elections were held and the secretive manner of the student officers.

It took only two weeks from the time candidates were required to submit petitions of intent to the elections of last Wednesday and Thursday.

During this period active campaigning was minimal. Most candidates posted flyers and banners around campus proclaiming their candidacy.

However, the only speeches candidates gave were at recent ASB meetings where student attendance is very low.

Solwari tries to capture motion, rythym and movement in his work. They are all integral parts of the disco and dance floor. He said, "You get caught up in the sights, sounds and feelings. As an artist you become super-sensitive to these feelings and influences."

Solwari by no means ignores the more serious aspects of life. He has done extensive work in what he calls his "Vietnam"

He also has done work on Attica and other political subjects.
Kehinde Solwari, a name he adopted on a trip to Tanzania Africa, means second twin and knowledge. He says he looks forward to returning to Africa.
Solwari said, "being a Black studies teacher you get a lot of experience in history. You can't help but be impressed. I like to deal with politics; with real life! That's what I want my work to show."
With recognition from Black. Art Inter-Quarterly's publisher Samella Lewis and others in the art world, Solwari is, as he puts it, "getting ready to move into the whole art realm."
Solwari said, "life is constant struggle." Right now it seems the struggle is paying off for Kehinde Solwari — FCC's black studies teacher and artist on the move.

Chancellor Explains Why We Need The Instructional Materials Fee

Editors note. This interviews was arranged and conducted more than a week prior to the May 4 State Center Community College District Board of Trustees meeting. At that meeting the trustees rejected the instructional materials fee under discussion.

by Nina Tinker

by Nina Tinker

In an interview last Thursday, Dr. Ray Cattani, Chancellor of the State Center Community College District, said, "The needed instructional materials fee problem has arrived at the point of no return. There can be no more freebies, and a realist approach is most necessary."

Cattani said that Californians have long led the nation in support of higher education. California is the only state remaining which still charges no tuition for students who enroll at any of the three major branches of higher education. These include the nine campuses of the University of California, the 19 campuses of the California State University system, and the 107 community colleges.

He said the passage of Proposition 13 seriously limited district revenues, With the gradual reduction in the number of programs and services available to students in the SCCCD, the problem is progressively worsening and seriously affecting student access.

Cattani briefly cited several Cattani briefly cited several problems. First, the college of-fered fewer sections of specific time provide some other advantages."

Cattani said the fee charged to each student would range from $2 to $20 per section per semester, not to exceed $30 per semester for any one student. A six-category fee schedule — $2, $4, $8, $12, $15, and $20 — for courses is based on the least ex-pensive course in the category. Cattani said, "For the pur-pose of assisting low income students to pay or to be excused from the fee, district regulations will be developed to alleviate hardships."

He also said a 100 percent refund of materials fees would be available for withdrawals from classes through the end of the fourth week of instruction, but no refund would be available after that. The refund would be determined by the cost of classes not dropped by the student.

Cattani said, "With the basic access to the classes at FCC having eroded, something had to be done. A modest fee decided by a fair decision of the poard of trustees would be in the best interest of the district. It is something we will live with."

numberf of other classes and services. Cattani said the philosophi-cal opposition to fees had to be weighed against the reality of eroding student access.

The counseling center also reminds students that they should take placement tests in math and English as soon as possible. Students who fail to do so could be delayed in registering next fall or be excluded from certain classes in math and English.

Continuing students have been mailed information about counseling which includes a yellow slip with the name of an assigned counselor or advisor. Students not yet assigned a counselor or adviser may select one from a list posted on the second floor of the student services building.

All students on academic probation must see counselors before starting fall enrollment. Counselors must also approve programs for all students who plan to exceed the maximum units permitted on their registration permits.

Information about counseling and faculty advising is available in the counseling center, second floor, student services building, or by calling 442-8226. Students who see counselors should bring their registration permits.
