Bartlett victorious in campus student elections

By Donna Reese

Seeing more activity out of the Associated Student Body is Denise Bartlett's plan as newly elected ASB president for the 1984-85 school year.

"The senate has been so lowkeyed this year," said Bartlett. "There has been very little activity that people have seen.'

Bartlett feels she can do something to change this. One of the first things she would like to do is move Ramburger Roundup back into the fall semester.

"I'm real excited about the concept of bringing that back (into the fall)," she said.

Ramburger Roundup is a social mixer for students and faculty to get to know one another.

In the past Bartlett said they have had a barbecue where the faculty and administration cooked and served a dinner for the students.

Bartlett said she would also like to work with Mark Aydelotte, FCC's public information officer, in setting up an alumni association on campus.

"They have one at (Fresno)

State and they are real active," she said. "They are behind the whole Red Wave thing.'

Besides setting up social events for the students, Bartlett said she is going to take a look at some of the more crucial issues on campus such as day care and campus safety.

"I want to make a real push for day care. I understand there are some plans in the works. I want to find out exactly what they are and where they are at,' said Bartlett.

Bartlett feels day care is something that has to be addressed and since she is a woman as well as the next ASB president the people in charge of day care may listen to her.

"I don't have any children but I understand what it is like to be in that position," she said. "Trying to juggle family and school is difficult.'

Bartlett said the situation is even worse for single parents who wish to return to school.

Campus safety is another issue Bartlett wishes to take a good look at. She said an example of this would be to take a harder look at the master plan for lighting and see if it can be updated.

"As a professional speaking from my job (Bartlett is the public education director for Rape Counseling Service in Fresno), I look at the lighting situation and shake my head and say, 'This is bogus. This is not right," said Bartlett. "As a student who gets out of classes at 11 o'clock some nights, I look at the lighting and say, 'I'm scared.'"

Bartlett said she realizes there is a lot of diplomacy and that there is going to have to be a lot of give and take on these issues.

"Maybe we can cut back someplace else and have better lighting," she said.

The one issue Bartlett doesn't know were she stands is academics.

She said she was hit with that question one night when she was out campaigning. "I'm thinking, what can I do for academics? I really don't know where I can affect that (area).'

Bartlett said to be honest she hasn't really looked into the issue. She said she knows there are sections that need to be added but she does not know how muck influence the ASB has in that area.

"The cost of good day care in the community can be astounding," said Bartlett, "even for somebody working fulltime."

Poet talks politics in '84

By Carlos Cordova

Action speaks louder than words but sometimes it takes words to get people to act.

Marvin X is good with words. He has been a poet, lecturer, community organizer, teacher and historian. He is best known for having been denied a teaching position at Fresno State University in the early 1970's because of his revolutionary beliefs and activities. The action sparked a series of unrest and violence at the university that led to the eventual resignation of the university president.

Since then, Marvin X has taught elsewhere, helped organized the modern black theater movement in San Francisco and New York, and now writes extensively catching-up on a backlog of half-finished works.

On Thursday, April 12, he spoke at the Fresno City College student lounge. His topic was "Politics in 1984".

He greeted his audience by burning incense, playing music, and selling his self-published works of poetry.

"I look at politics through the eyes of a poet," Marvin X said. He is not endorsing a presidential candidate but would vote for Jesse Jackson. He pointed to the audience of mostly black students and told them, "Jesse Jackson is you running. You've had a chance to vote for Mr. Jones, Mr. White and Mr. Green, now you have a chance to vote for Mr. Black."

Marvin X, however, warned the students not to have an illusions about a black face. "A black face is not sufficient," he said. Marvin X believes that if a black man can't do the job he should get out. "You have to make him (Jesse Jackson) accountable to you," he said. "There must be a day when you are held accountable by black

Marvin X told the students not to worry about the white man in 1984. They have their own problems, he said. "He is still trying to decide whether he's a man or a woman."

To be a man you have to be a leader in the mold of a Martin Luther King Jr., Malcolm X or Jesse Jackson, said Marvin X. "They're not perfect but they tried to be somebody. "What are you doing?" he asked.

Marvin X believes there has been too much of an emphasis in the past on the individual. "Show some group solidarity," he said. "Don't end up in Jonestown. Don't feed your kids Kool-Aid just because someone tells you to."

He received mild applause from the audience after he finished his speech. He then read from his new works of poetry. In a three-piece suit, with a softspoken voice and a face hidden behind biack sunglasses, Marvin X was not a poet or a politician, he was much more.

Low turn-out for campus elections

By Walt Moore

The politically apathetic Fresno City College student body has spoken and said, "Let a small, self-appointed group of students represent us to the board of trustees, the administration, and to Fresno in general," according to Latica Murietta, Student Affairs staff

The Associated Student Body elections were held April 11 and 12. 145 votes were cast for 20 which means six seats will be appointed by the new board. The only contested seat was for president which was won by Denise Bartlett with 81 votes over James Wilcox with 51.

community colleges do not generate political interest because the students are on campus for only two years and these students have self-involved academic interests.

The latest ASB elections represents an all time low for campus political participation and observers are wondering if this is a new trend for future electorat.

The newly elected ASB is: Denise Bartlett, President; David positions. There were only 10 Pinuelas, Legislative Vicecandidate's for 16 senate seats President; David Smith, Executive Vice-President; David Pinuelas, Student Trustee; and Senators: Leticia Aponte, Maureen Kelly, Esther Miranda, William Stephens, Francis Bazter, Steven M. Fresno Ballet performs three classics

By Lindsey Franz Special to the Rampage

Tribal women smeared sacrificial blood over the body of Rick McBee before forcing him up the altar stairs where, with one quick thrust, the fierce Shaman plunged a spear through his heart. As McBee fell gracefully to his death, the lights dimmed, and the curtain was

Thus ended Igor Stravinsky's "Rite of Spring", the most dramatic offering of the Fresno Ballet's Spring Gala '84.

Three ballets were performed April 14 and 15 at the Fresno Memorial Auditorium to taped musical accompaniment.

The first offering was Tchaikovsky's "Romeo and Juliet", choreographed by Steve Pepper, who also danced as Mercutio. It began on troubled footing and never recovered. The incidental couples at the onset were of poorly matched heights causing them difficulty in executing turns and making their lifts seem ponderous and wobbly rather than deft.

Terese Cenci McGee (Juliet) was lovely and expressive, moving her hands and arms in seemingly effortless, flowing patterns reminiscent of ocean swells. Unfortunately, the impact of her performance was marred by Fred Bologna (Romeo), who handled her as though he were a longshoreman loading cargo. Bologna does receive a bouquet, however, for his set decoration as do John Allen Osborne and Glenda Holmes for their excellent costume designs.

"Rite of Spring" followed, choreography, featuring costumes and scenery prepared by guest choreographer, Donald Bradburn. The intricacies of this ballet were beyond the talents of the majority of the performers with two notable exceptions. Rick McBee (Young Brave/The Chosen One) turned in a flawless performance marked by grace, strength, steadiness, and highly sensuous gymnasitc ablility. Kirsten Poirer (Shadow Dance was lithe and lovely. Her du with McBee was romantic dan at its best. FCC students exposed to careers in computers

By Mary Downs

Fresno City College's Counseling Center and the FCC Business Department presented a 'Computer Careers Symposium' in the FCC Theatre on April

This symposium was designed to explore the impact of compterization on the workplace.

John Wintemute, data processing manager for Gott-schalk's, represented the small computer-using business. Joyce Crane, data processing manager for Construction Material Suppliers; Incorporated, represented the small computer-related business, and A.J. (Tony) Newborne, staffing consultant for the GESCO Corporation, represented the large, nationwide computer developing and using business.

"I don't play with computers on a daily basis," said Newborne. "I usually play with the people who are going to be playing with the computers."

"There's going to be a huge demand for personal computing abilities; a need for programmers," said Wintemute. "Changes are constant and dynamic."

"I think there will be a lot of opportunity in the small operations," said Crane. "We'll see more of them (computers) in doctor's offices.'

Newborne said students should recognize computer work as highly competitive, be honest about the amount of their experience, convey interest and have good communications skills. Students must also know how to translate technical knowledge into layman's terms, have a goal and know how to achieve the goal.

"When a computer is installed, people feel extremely threatened," said Crane, nodding. "They fight change, think it's hard (to learn to use a computer) and (think) they can't learn it.'

Future jobs will tend to be more specialized in areas such as teleprocessing managing or advertising, said Wintemute.

"A degree is not necessary," Wintemute said. "The more courses you can take, the better off you are. Being logicallyminded helps programming."

The pannel agreed students should learn as many of the different computer languages as possible, multiplying their employability. The panel said their companies use Basic, the beginner's all-purpose symbolic instruction code; Basic Plus Two, an extension of the Basic language; IBM Assembler, a language used to develop applications; and Cobol, a programming language.

"Chances are you'll have to work with one (computer)," said Wintemute. "Know a little bit of typing."

"If you want to get into the field, there is nothing wrong with starting as a data operator," said Crane. "I hired two people from

"Good skills and work habits are what we look for," said Wintemute. "Some (computer workers at Gottschalk's) came out of the (Fresno) City College program."

Wintemute, however, said few employers hire from a two-year program right into a programming job. "We start people as computer operators, probably on night shift," he said.

Panel members noted the importance of using early work experience to add to one's learning experience.

"Chances are better if you have a degree," said Newborne, emphatically. "Most of our positions are for experienced people."

"It's scary to think of a person who learned (only) one way to program (working) on the system," said Crane.

Crane said it is essential to get the basic concepts of working with computers in college but it is good to start work with a small computer system because the learning process will cover all the functions of the system.

The three expressed support

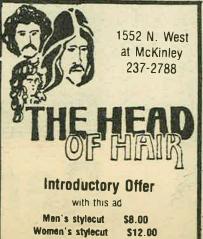

moting from within their ow personnel.

"Get your foot in the door, Wintemute said. "Then, the o portunities are there."

The audience heard of th value of indirectly related sul jects such as algebra, Englis interpersona communication.

Emphasis went toward th value of having a goal in min and recognizing opportunit when it should occur.

"I think it (the symposium was excellent," said Candy Can non, an FCC student, echoin statements of other members of the audience, "It answered ju the things I needed to know.'

Remember

In a little over a month many of you will leave the hallowed halls of Fresno City College. Some will go on to a variety of different endeavors, some to institutions of higher learning and others into the world to make a living in your chosen field.

In these cold structures of concrete and steel, hours will have been spent in preparation for the big test. Soon the tests will all be taken and the results of the past two years will be recorded.

Fresno

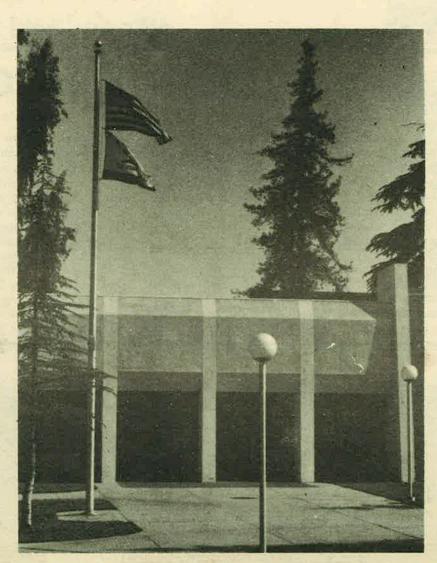

Memories of the buildings on these two pages will remain in your mind forever; the good times and the bad, the long evening hours in the library when you could think of a dozen better places to be, the sweat and tears of the past two years or more are finally going to pay off. You are going out and prove the faculty and staff along with these old buildings at Fresno City College have molded the best brain that has ever been turned out in Fresno.

Professional student studies procrastination

Special to Rampage

Patrick Grecco, a doctoral student at the California school of Professional Psychology and a psychology intern at Fresno City College's counseling center last year, has been a student for 23 years. Now that he's only months away from receiving his doctorate in clinical psychology he says: "Too many of those years were spent putting off school work, rushing at the last minute to study for an exam, write a paper or do homework."

Procrastination is a funny way of behaving, but it's also pretty painful and basically selfdefeating.

Psychology 7 students from both Spring and Fall terms this academic year participated in research that Grecco conducted to explore this common but little understood phenomenon.

He defines procrastination as "any behavior by which a person needlessly delays or postpones an important task that he or she has decided to do, is capable of doing, yet doesn't do."

He adds that this behavior must be uncomfortable for the person and also irrational. To postpone or delay for a good reason is not procrastination. This sort of behavior can result in poor grades, dropped courses, missed learning opportunities, and a lot of unnecessary grief.

Estimates of the scope of the problem range to as high as 95 percent of college level persons. Grecco's findings confirm that about 85 percent of the nearly 1000 students he studied admit that they procrastinate in their school work at least some of the time and more significantly, that nearly one in five rate themselves as having a real problem because of it.

Basically what Grecco did to study procrastination was to develop a psychological scale by which procrastinative thinking could be examined.

Using cognitive theory, a psychological theory that holds that what people say to themselves is important in determining how they feel and behave, Grecco wanted to fin out what the typical thoughts of "self-statements" are of people who procrastinate a lot and how those thoughts might be different for people who don procrastinate.

He started by having 1 students "monitor" their think ing about doing school work for a period of seven days--five of these students considered themselves high procrastinator and five saw themselves as low procrastinators.

With information he learne from these volunteers he combined material that he obtaine from related psychologica literature in order to form an in itial pool of items for his scale

The items were in the form of self-statements; for example, "don't feel like doing this work' or "The sooner I start, the sooner I can relax."

After he got this list of som 55 items, he asked about 25 students to endorse those item that sounded familiar to then when they are confronted with doing some school work assign ment that they really don't fee like doing. They were asked to rate these items on a five poin scale from "hardly ever" to "very often" according to how frequently they had a similar thought.

Using a statistical analysis of the results, he was able to reduce the list down to the 33 items that were best at differentiating between the high and the low procrastinating students.

During the following term these items were again given to a large group of Psych 7 students to see if they were still good a picking out the high from the low procrastinators. He also gave these students some other psychological measures to see how his procrastination scale compared to these other measurers.

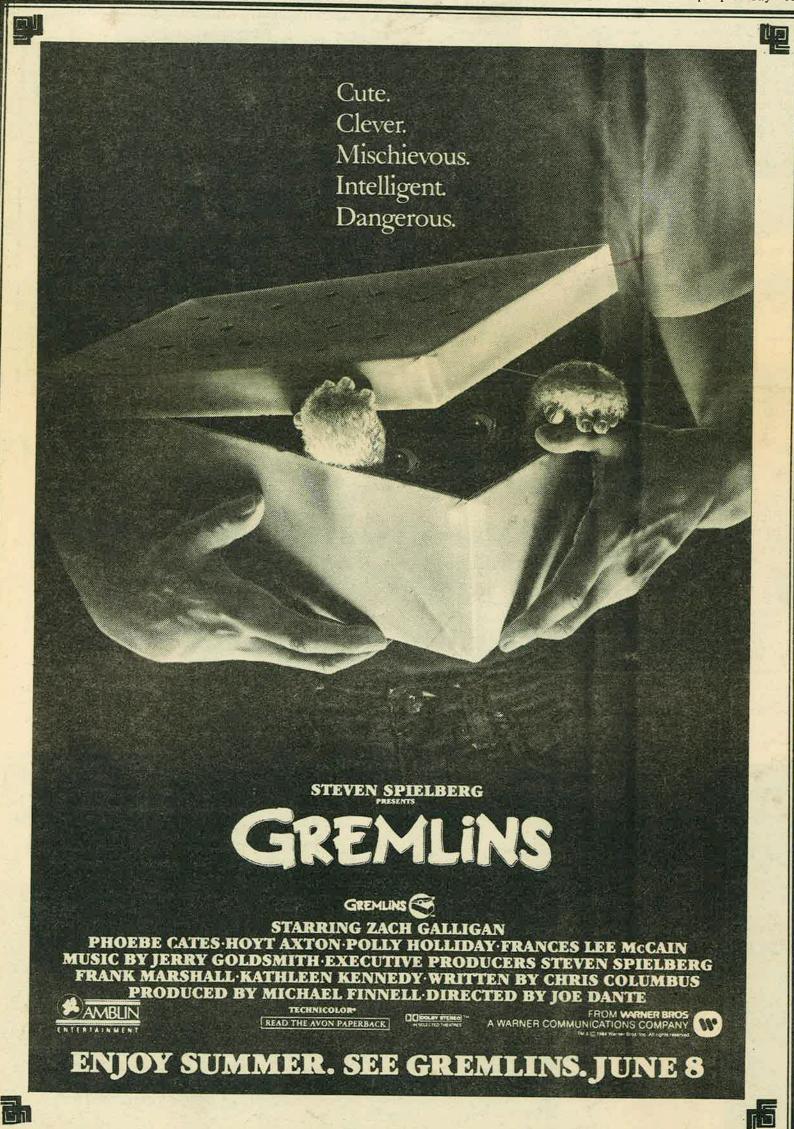

Amoung his findings from this procedure are that procrastination is related to anxiety, self-esteem, depression, and self-control.

Grecco says that people procrastinate for a lot of different reasons but that what seems to be a common feature of their thinking is that high procrastinators tend to give in to their negative self-statements.

While we all must have some negative thoughts about school work at some time, the people who get their work done are those people who somehow use those negative thoughts to spur themselves on. For example, they might say to themselves: " don't feel like doing this work now but I won't feel like doing it later either, so the sooner I get started the sooner I'll be finished with it."

The problem of procrastination is complicated and there are many ways of dealing with it, but the best advice that Grecco offers is to follow a schedule, make careful and realistic plans, and to reward yourself regularly for sticking to it.

Health Fair includes FCC stop

By Mary Downs

Health Fairs will be offered to the people of Central California during the next three weeks with a fair being held at Fresno City College on May 4.

The FCC fair will be sponsored by Community Services, the Associated Student Body Senate, and the Health Service.

"We're using 50 volunteers here on campus," said Linda Albright, R.N. in the Health Service office. "Pat Brunetti (the other nurse in the Health Service) has been working hard on setting this up, too. "We're planning on doing about 500 screenings."

For those 18 and older, the FCC fair will test blood pressure, anemia, vision, and hearing; oral screening will be done, height and weight will be checked, summaries and referrals will be given.

Health exhibits and demonstrations will help educate the public.

Special testing is available for a fee: blood tests for diabetes, cholesterol, kidney and liver function, is done for $8.00 and requires fasting (don't eat anything) for four hours before the test. The coronary risk profile blood test is done for $10.00 and requires fasting for 12 hours before the test; both tests will be done for $14.00 after a 12-hour fast.

Water, plain coffee or tea may be taken before these tests.

Medications are to be taken as prescribed, and diabetics are not to fast for these tests!

Volunteers will staff the individual booths at these fairs:

April 28 from 8 a.m. to noon at Saint Agnes' Total life

April 28 from 9 a.m. to 3. p.m. at the Mariposa Masonic Building and the Methodist Church Parish Hall.
