Labor Costs Force Cafeteria Shutdown?

by Randy Risner
Contributing Writer

The Fresno City College cafeteria may be closed by the State Center Community College District Board of Trustees if its bleak financial picture can't be turned around, according to Richard Cleland, Business Manager.

According to Cleland, the cafeteria has lost money for the past four years and lost $33,000 by the end of the school year 1984-85.

The main problems facing the cafeteria, said Cleland, is competition from fast food outlets and high labor costs. A fast food outlet such as Wendy's can hire labor at minimum wage with no benefits while the average cafeteria worker earns a yearly salary of $12,000. In addition to salary, full-time cafeteria workers receive sick leave, vacation pay and other benefits that add 32 percent to their salary cost. This equates to an approximate cost to Fresno City College of $15,800 for a cafeteria worker earning a $12,000 annual salary, according to Cleland.

"Until we can figure out a way to reduce our labor costs (in the cafeteria) we can't make a profit," said Cleland.

Cleland stated that approximately 55 percent of gross sales in the cafeteria go to labor costs. "We've allowed our labor to become so high we're caught between a rock and a hard place," he said. According to Cleland in order for the cafeteria to make a profit the ratio of labor and benefits to gross sales needs to be approximately 30-35 percent.

Although labor costs and outside competition remain a problem for the cafeteria, many of the other problems that plagued it in the past are now being turned around, Cleland said.

Cafeteria manager Dale Lumsden, who assumed control of the cafeteria after manager Steve Emker was stabbed to death at a Fresno bar last March, has begun to correct many of the cafeteria's remaining problems, according to Cleland.

"We're buying better and in bigger quantities," said Cleland. "We've decreased the labor in the Food Factory and increased traffic and sales in the soft drink shack from $150 per day last year to $250-500 per day."

Although many problems remain, Cleland feels that the cafeteria's problems are solvable. "I want to urge the students to get behind and patronize this fine facility rather than have the board close it down because of financial losses," Cleland said.

FCC student is new Miss Fresno

FCC student Kelly Dixon was crowned Miss Fresno County last Saturday night. The pageant was held in the Roosevelt High School Auditorium.

Every now and then the proper ingredients are mixed together into the same package and the result is dynamite. That is precisely what happened at this year's Miss Fresno County pageant. The ingredients were poise, talent, and beauty; the resulting explosion was Fresno City College's own Kelly Dixon.

With stiff competition from first runner-up Christy Lewis, a striking brunette and experienced pageant contestant, dazzling baton solos by world champion Yolanda Costallanos and FCC student Judy Cobarubiss, Kelly gave a spectacular performance that stole the hearts of the crowd as well as those of the judges.

In an interview with Kelly just a week before the Pageant, she seemed more content to talk about her dancing and continued education than about the Miss Fresno competition.

"I heard about (Miss Fresno pageant) from Lisa Steffensen, Miss Fresno of 1985," Kelly said, "but never really planned on competing. My mother is credited for putting this all together, somewhat behind my back. I was surprised when the pageant called and asked me to compete."

The new Miss Fresno is the youngest of two girls. At 19 years of age, she has been dancing in the Fresno Ballet Company for 12 years and has been cast for the lead in "Cinderella" next spring. Sadly enough for ballet lovers, Kelly says this is her last year with the company.

"Dancing is an art for the young, and when I say young, I mean like 13 and 14 years old. So at 19, I've gone about as far as I can."

Maybe that's true in her mind, but the "Ballet en Pointe" she performed Saturday was simply breathtaking. To the enthusiast, Kelly's rendition of "Tchaikovsky Opera 71a," more commonly referred to as "The Nutcracker Suite,"

Board, State Battle Over Building--Trouble Is, Nobody Wants It

by Darrell A. McCulley
Managing Editor

Tennis anyone? Ownership of the old Administration Building is being batted back and forth between the state of California and the College, like an old tennis ball, and the court they're playing on is the Superior Court of Fresno.

But the State is threatening to give it back anyway.

According to the terms of the original agreement, FCC gave the title of the building to the State for conversion to an agricultural museum. The State was supposed to renovate and repair the building and open the museum. If the museum fell through, the building was to revert back to FCC. What is unclear is whether the original agreement requires the State to renovate the building even if the museum didn't go through.

As for tearing the building down to spare the $9 million to $18 million cost of repair, that is now against the law. In order to qualify for certain funds, the building was put on both the state and federal lists of historical sites, thereby protecting it from demolition. According to an article in the Fresno Bee, the cost of blowing up the building would be about $40,000.

The tennis match will continue until the judge decides in whose court the Administration Building belongs.

Search Underway for New President

by Darrell A. McCulley
Managing Editor

The ink may not even be dry on the resignation of FCC President Clyde McCulley, but the Board of Trustees has already begun the search for a replacement.

The search is to be a national one, and is expected to produce a suitable candidate within six months. The new President is scheduled to join the Board sometime between April and June 1987.

According to the office of Chancellor Bill Stewart, the process of choosing the next President of Fresno City College will be divided into three phases:

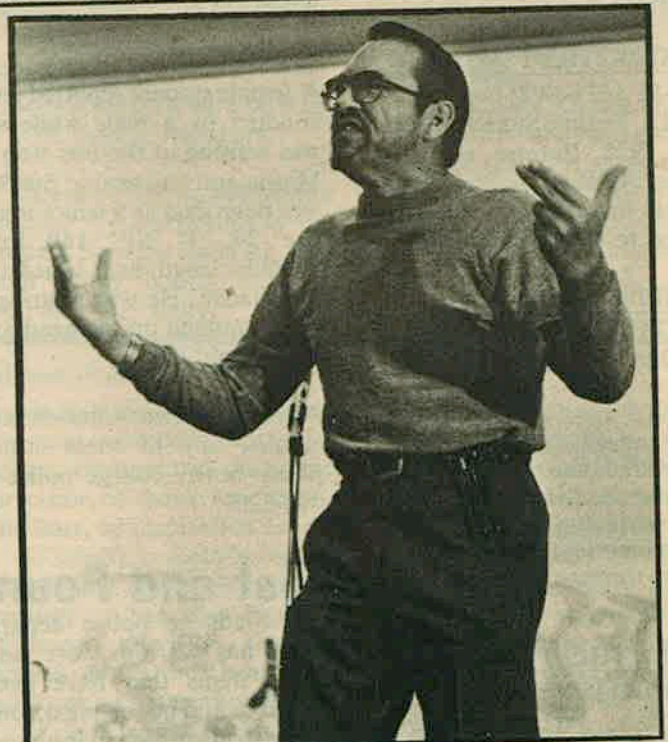

First, the Board of Trustees will take suggestions and solicit input as to what the job description of the position should be. The Faculty Senate, Classified Council, Associated Student Body, various management positions, and the Board itself are to be the sources of this input, although suggestions from all sectors of the community and student population are welcome.

Second, a screening committee will be chosen to select eight to ten semi-finalists. This committee will consist of:

5 members nominated by the Faculty Senate, 2 members nominated by the Classified Employee Council, 2 members nominated by the ASB, 4 administrators appointed by the Chancellor, and 1 classified manager appointed by the Chancellor.

Finally, after this committee advance three to five suitable nominees comes the third and final stage: the actual choosing of the new President. This will be done by the Board of Trustees in conjunction with the Chancellor.

Drug War Declared ... Are We Winning?

by Darrel A. McCully
Managing Editor

President and Mrs. Reagan appear on TV and declare war on drug abuse. The "Just Say No" campaign is in place in elementary and secondary schools in all 50 states. The Congress votes a budget-busting load of money to combat excessive drug use by American workers. Amidst all this media attention, the question presents itself: Will any of this work?

First, there are the efforts to stop drugs at their source. The US Army has been in Bolivia, one of the major suppliers of cocaine and other drugs to this country, to try and force the manufacturers out of business. With the cooperation of the Bolivian government, the army has been raiding labs, staging areas, and points of departure with the idea of making it so dangerous to manufacture and ship the "white gold" that peasants who produce the raw plant materials will find the market prices too low to be profitable. By forcing the farmers to turn to some other more profitable crop, the US hopes to drastically cut down on the amount of cocaine produced.

On this attempt, the US score stands at one-and-one. While the crackdown on the labs and landing strips has dropped the amount of Bolivian cocaine coming in by 30 percent, the effort to get the farmers to produce something else seems to be failing. True, the price of coca leaves is falling, but rather than switch crops the farmers appear to be sticking with their crops in anticipation of the US eventually leaving and the prices going up again. The net result of this is that the peasants who are dependant on the cocaine industry to feed their families are finding it harder to do so. This not only makes them poorer, it makes them hate the United States. And if the President is going to force them out of the coca leaf business, he's going to have to keep the pressure on. That will mean leaving American troops in Bolivia on a semi-permanent basis. That's the only way he's going to outwait the farmers and force them to change crops. Whether or not you might agree with this strategy, it must be obvious that this may be the only effective way of cutting back the actual production.

As for advertising campaigns aimed at the general public, again there is a 1-1 record. For the most part, ads aimed at the adult population, along with rallies and celebrities and such, are largely ineffective. The only ones that are going to the rallies are the ones that have already made the decision not to use drugs; preaching to them is a waste of time. On the other hand, people that use the stuff aren't going to stop because of a balloon-and-confetti ad campaign.

However, efforts aimed at the influential young seem to be making tremendous headway. Children really are learning to "Just Say No." Incidences of drug abuse are down among the young while the treatment and rehabilitation of abusing kids is up.

Before the impact of the congressional actions can be assessed, they have to be given time, precious time, to work. In the meantime, to the outside observer we seem to be pushing back the drug invasion, but this is still war and we're still a long, long way from winning.

Letters to the Editor

Fresno City College is facing a very serious problem, which, if not addressed immediately, will lower the fine academic standing of this college. The problem faced is the lack of computers available to the students of the Business Department.

Computers are a very large part of the business community. In just four years, over 92 percent of all businesses will make use of computers in their everyday transactions; from payroll to budget and record keeping to how many games -did the Rams win.

There are over 900 students currently enrolled in some type of computer class at Fresno City College. Many more would enroll if there were enough facilities to accommodate them; the computer lab has only thirty-eight computers.

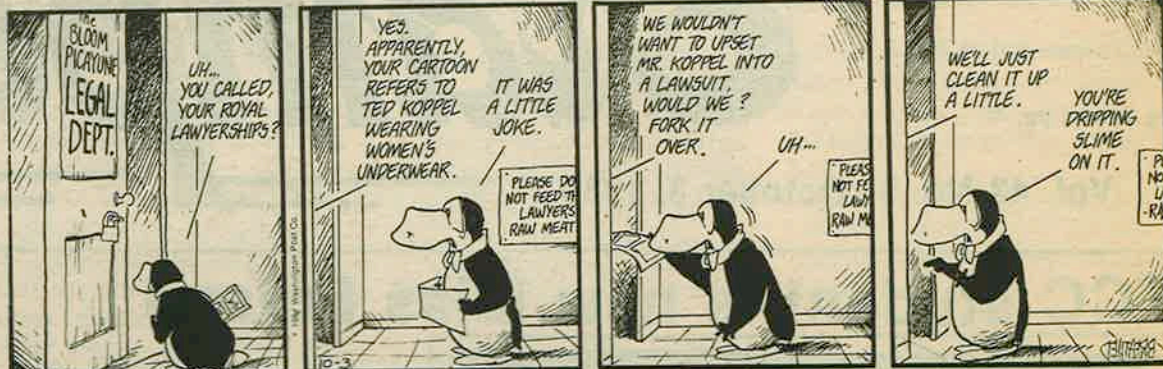

This is very frustrating for teachers, as well as students. The quality of our work suffers and is not as good as it could be if we could get more lab time on the computers. Many of my fellow students and I feel that if the College can afford to build a new indoor track for our fine athletes--at a cost of over $200,000--surely the College should be able to find some way to uphold the fine teaching and high standards of Fresno City College.

If purchasing new computers is too much to ask, then perhaps asking I.B.M. to donate some computers would be the answer. Since donations of this type can be tax deductible, perhaps even private donations can be sought. Something definitely needs to be accomplished if we in the Business Division are to be competitive in the future job market.

Dental Hygiene Week

by Krista Keosheyan
Contributing Writer

Located downstairs in the science building is Fresno City College's dental hygiene clinic. The clinic gives the dental program students valuable experience while providing low cost dental care to those that need it.

Because of dental hygiene week from October 5 through 11, the clinic will be offering free teeth cleaning to an FCC student who buys a toothbrush for one dollar.

Other services provided by the clinic at low fees are oral cancer surveys, radiographs and full mouth X-rays. Oral inspections are given at no charge by the training hygienists.

The two-year dental hygiene program at FCC is designed to prepare students for licensing as dental hygienists so they may assume responsibilities in a dental office. These responsibilities include encouraging the preventive aspects of dental care, removing stains and deposits from the teeth, and exposing and processing dental X-rays. The program is accredited by the American Dental Association and approved by the California Board of Dental Examiners.

In order to apply for the dental program one must complete an FCC career majors application for the dental hygiene program and return it to the dental hygiene department. This application can be obtained from the Health Arts and Sciences Division office, or the dental hygiene office. Second, a student's high school and college must send one copy of official transcripts to the dental hygiene department. ACT assessment program scores are on file in the dental department. There will be a deadline for applications and only 20 students can be accepted at the start of the program.

"Z" Thief Back in Action

by Dave DeBusk
Contributing Writer

More bad news to all Datsun 'Z owners: the holocaust of last semester's six stolen 'Zs isn't over yet. Within the last week a 1972 240 'Z and a 1976 280 'Z were stolen from the FCC campus. About twelve 'Zs have been stolen in the past few weeks from the Fresno area.

Chief Kenneth Shrum of the campus police believes that it's possible the same group of thieves who struck last semester could be involved.

Apparently the door and ignition locks on 240 and 280 'Zs become weak with wear, making it easy for a thief to use a similar key to break in and start the car.

While police have recovered both of the cars stolen from campus, the incidents are still under investigation.

Once, Twice, Three Times A Dressler

by Mike Braa
Contributing Writer

The Commodores sang it so well: "Once, twice, three times a lady." If they had known the Dressler Sisters when they wrote that familiar song, a new meaning would have been given to an old tune. For there may be no better metaphor to describe the unity of Mary, Kathy, and Patti Dressler, three separate measures to a hit single.

For those who don't know them, the Dressler Sisters are a trio of singers whose talents have led them to shows in San Francisco, Palm Springs, Los Angeles, and right here in Fresno. The Dressler's (and incidently the are sisters) are currently staging a 40-minute show that engages the audience in a musical journey through the past, progressing with music from the 40s to the present. Their act includes songs from the Andrews Sisters, (decked in appropriate attire of course,) to Madonna, to the ever popular Bangles.

To sit and talk with these three is a show in itself. From the charming sophistication of Mary, the oldest, to the playful teen-age charm of Patti, the youngest, I cannot imagine a dull moment during a family reunion.

One of the first things you notice about the Dresslers is a unique bond that they attribute to their move from Illinois some years past. "When we moved out here from St. Louis," say Mary, "we only had each other. We left all our friends and family behind. Because of that I feel we have become closer."

The Dressler Sisters (from left) Kathy, Patti, and Mary have a singing style all their own that may eventually lead them to the top of the music charts. Kathy and Mary are currently attending FCC.

A quick glance towards Kathy and Patti confirms Mary's statement.

I had some difficulty in getting them to agree on some of my questions, however:

Rampage: What would you say was your biggest motivation to sing?

Mary: Mom

Kathy: Mom

Patti: Mom

Rampage: What takes the most priority in your lives?

Mary: Our music.

Kathy: Our music.

Patti: Our music.

Rampage: What color are your eyes?

Mary: Brown.

Kathy: Brown.

Patti: Brown.

After that I was afraid to ask about any boyfriends.

The three sister-musicians have been working professionally now for one year, but have been singing together since they were young children. You have already seen them here in Fresno singing backup for the band "Now or Never" at the Wild Blue Yonder.

Mary, Kathy, Patti are now working with great enthusiasm towards recording a demo-tape.

Mary: We have some studio time that we earned by doing some shows and commercials.

Kathy: We did a commercial for Channel 47.

Patti: We're trying to put together some original music for the tape.

Mary: What we're after now is getting a unique form, something different.

Patti: We want to do one song in a capella.

Three personalities cast in the same mold and formed into three separate identities by their environment. Three separate voices that come together in perfect harmony. Three pillars that support one dream. And three young ladies that stand before one very, very, proud mother.

Student Trades Cairo for Fresno

by Randy Risner
Contributing Writer

The best thing about America, according to Ayman Raafat, is "the spirit of America, the way of living and especially the California girls."

Raafat, a 23-year old Fresno City College international student from Cairo, Egypt, considers himself to be like any other normal American college student. "I live like an American," he said.

Raafat came to FCC one year and eight months ago to study architecture. After he completes his studies at FCC this semester, he hopes to be accepted to the University of California at Berkeley to complete his four-year degree. "I came all the way from Cairo to get an education," commented Raafat. "I might as well get the best."

In order to attend FCC, Raafat had to take the Test of English as a Foreign Language (TOEFL). The TOEFL is a comprehensive test of the English language that requires the student to demonstrate skills in listening comprehension, structure, vocabulary and writing. After receiving a qualifying score on the TOEFL and being accepted by FCC, Raafat was issued a student visa and allowed to begin his studies.

The thing that disturbs Raafat the most about the United States is the bad image

Americans have of Arabs. "There are good Arabs and bad Arabs just like there are good Americans and bad Americans," remarked Raafat.

Raafat doesn't blame Americans for the way they feel about Arabs, but he wishes that Americans would treat people on an individual basis rather than discredit them because of their nationality. He feels that people should get to know a person before passing judgement on them. "We have to accept the fact that we all have to live together," he said.

Raafat said that most people like him once they get to know him because of his easy-going nature and his willingness to communicate. He feels that many international students are too shy. "Communicate, damn it!" exclaimed Raafat. "Please do. Don't be shy. Feel proud of your nationality and communicate with people and they will like you."

One of the basic problems international students have, according to Raafat, is communicating in a foreign language. "It's very important to improve your English," Raafat said. He recommends that international students talk to Americans every chance they get and take basic English courses. "Best of all," he said, "have an American girlfriend. She will make you learn English."

Movie Review

Shanghai Surprise
Reviewed by Erik Hansen
Starring Madonna and Sean Penn
Directed by Jim Goddard
Rated PG-13 97 min

I felt this movie had some good things going for it. Sean Penn, Madonna, and produced by ex-Beatle George Harrison (Time Bandits). So I took a chance...and paid the price.

Gloria Tatlock (Madonna) is a missionary in 1937 Japanese-occupied China. She needs to find a certain warlord to get some opium to get morphine for wounded soldiers. She finds this tough guy named Gendon "Big Sticks" Weasey (Sean Penn) who speaks the lings and together they find trouble and romance.

Why was I disappointed? Something went terribly wrong with this movie! Based on a novel Faraday's Flowers by Tony Kennick, "Shanghai Surprise" just was a total failure. there wasn't any chemistry between Mr. and Mrs. Madonna and the director, Jim Goddard, just didn't put his best foot forward. I say this about Mr. Goddard because in 1983 he directed an excellent 'Nicholas Nickleby' for syndicated television. I just don't know what went wrong:

Rated PG-13 for Strong Language and Adult Themes, "Shanghai Surprise" should be missed.

The men's division of the Fresno City College cross-country team won the Lou Vasquez Invitational cross-country meet last Saturday.

FCC's women finished in second place in the meet, which was held at Golden Gate Park in San Francisco.

Behind the Rams in the men's division were West Valley, San Mateo, Santa Rosa, and Foothill.

Porterville won the women's division with FCC in second followed by Shasta, Santa Rosa, and West Valley.

For the men, Jess Llanes of FCC won the individual title by 3 seconds over David Ottaway of Lassen. The Rams David Naranjo finished in sixth place and Danny Vega, James Besser, and Tom Morgan all placed in the top 100 for the Rams.

On the women's side, Elizabeth Chavez of FCC placed second and Tiffany Shaw, Doria Ford, Kathleen Baker, and Maurie Potts finished in the top 50 for the Rams.

The Rams next meet will be tomorrow at the San Mateo Invitational in San Mateo.

Winless Rams lose to Laney

The Fresno City College football team, 0-3 so far this year, will face Modesto Junior College tomorrow night in Modesto.

The Rams are coming off a 24-23 loss to Laney College, a game which Ram's head coach Bill Musick thinks FCC should have won.

"We probably should have won the last one and we should have won this one," Musick said.

One factor that hurt the Rams was the loss of starting quarterback Frank Hine.

"Frank had an absolutely great week of practice and we felt he was going to have a great game. He just got sick before the game. We didn't know he wasn't going to play until just before the game," Musick said.

That forced FCC to go with reserve quarterback Jim Lowe for the game.

"The other QBs are just as competitive but not adequately prepared. The starter gets half the practice time and the other quarterbacks split the other practice time. Jim Lowe and Ron Monis did some good things out there," Coach Musick said.

CCAIEYC

The Fresno City College student chapter of Central California Association for the Education of Young Children (CCAIEYC) will be holding a meeting on October 9 from 12:15 to 1:15 in Conference Room B of the Cafeteria.
